

MISCELLANY

Cause of Retort from the Ladies.

The odious man of the Courier seems to relish nothing better than a "crusade against tilting hoops," which cause, he asserts, has been strangely mistaken. Commenting on a feminine plea for their grace and utility, he remarks: "It is not because ladies show their legs, for it is habitually done by the women of many nations, and is not necessarily indecent. But the tilting hoop makes a pretense of covering the legs, as though one should say, 'I am showing you what I ought not to.' If the ladies will wear short dresses, instead of long ones looped up and held out, sensible men will find no fault. We are glad to learn Eastern ladies wear pantaloons; our ladies might very properly adopt the habit." Now, ladies, isn't this a pretty tirade against us? And, as our sex prevents us from taking tangible satisfaction by giving him a pummeling, let us seize and hold him by every available button hole, and pour into his ears such a volley of anathemas as he never before heard, and give him the benefit of that "organ" of speech which has been proclaimed we possess to an unlimited degree; let us give one unanimous shout of indignation; confuse, deafen, madden him with the mellifluous epithets, "brute," "monster," "fiend incarnate!" How dare you insinuate that the ladies of this city wear no pantaloons? How could you, sir, thus boldly accuse us of such an unheard-of indecency? Shameful, ridiculous; 'tis a monstrous libel, an infamous misrepresentation, an unpardonable non-appreciation of our be-ruffled, be-fluted under-gear. It is false and base, and we won't bear it tamely—that we won't; and, if you don't take it back, you will not soon again have the pleasure of acknowledging a beautiful bouquet from a lady friend. We prefer to send our flowers whence come our compliments. Your style of returning compliments don't seem to prevail among intelligent people.

We advise you, the next windy day, to rub up your specs, sit down fair and square at the window of your sanctum, (where you are sure to be seen on windy days,) and do not pretend to "ignore the fact" of the existence of some of the finest handiwork in the way of "frills and edgings." Any one but an obtuse, captious editor, of your species, would pronounce them faultless; and then, sensible men never find fault with a well-dressed lady at all, and do not consider a subject to call forth ugly criticisms. We will not wear short dresses until it is decreed by fashion or custom to do so. You would be the first to open a battery of censure on our appearance in the streets in that style, and "bloomer costume" is not generally in favor. We will persist in wearing our dresses long in the drawing-room, for its gracefulness, and looped up in the street, for its neatness and convenience, which latter style we think a great improvement on all the "sweep-the-street system" which prevailed formerly, and created ridicule and rebuke to an alarming extent. And as for the "tilters," they are quite indispensable, and we will have our skirts held out by them for all the "likes o' you."

If it shocks your sense of propriety to see our "pretty gaiters" and "lisle thread hose," don't look higher so pertinaciously, to let your optics deceive you and accuse us so outrageously. Pull down your blue shades and be sure you don't peep out when high winds prevail. We did not dress our pedal extremities with immaculate hose and high-heeled boots for your dull eyes to squint at, nor for the crowd of loafers who stare us out of countenance and "out of gait" at the street corners. We dress to look neatly and feel comfortably, with a regard to prevailing modes, as every lady should. We dress to please, and feel sure we receive the just appreciation of all well-bred gentlemen, who make us feel our efforts are not "labor lost." We have heard enough about bonnets, "water-falls" and "tilting hoops," and we think it high time to put it down; and Mr. Editor of the Courier will yet live to learn, as many have before, that an attempt to reform dress is futile, and we would recommend silence to you when again you think of occupying the questionable position of inspecting and recording what ladies "don't wear under their crinoline," or you will hear again from "an enraged reddresser of wrongs."

NEWBERRY HERALD--CARD.

BY the fire of Monday morning, 18th instant, the presses, together with almost the whole of our types, &c., were consumed, and our office made a complete wreck. The publication of the Herald is, therefore, suspended, but only for a short time, we trust. By the loan of a small press and a few type cases, and, in a few days, together with a few odds and ends fortunately saved, we will be able in a few days to issue a small sheet for temporary purposes. In the meantime, the utmost exertion will be made to procure a new and complete outfit in presses and type in the shortest possible time, when we will be enabled to resume a full publication of our paper. We trust that our short suspension and unfortunate failure to supply our patrons will not cause them to feel a loss of interest, but rather an increase of zeal to aid us by their influence to recover from so serious a loss.

Respectfully, THOS. F. GRENEKER, R. H. GRENEKER.

By giving the above a few insertions, and a notice will be appreciated. June 21.
